BIO · SHORT

Dina Hegazi is a Berlin-based psychic medium. Before that: fifteen years as a Sorbonne-trained oil and gas lawyer, a conservative Muslim childhood in Cairo, a marriage that broke her faith. She lost everything, then started hearing clearly. Today she reads, teaches, and says the thing nobody else will.

THE STORY

As a child in Cairo she talked to the tree outside her window and felt answered. Four months pregnant, she heard a voice: look at his phone. The divorce that followed broke her religion. "I followed every rule and ended up in prison anyway." Then came unavailable men, plant medicine, a sexual awakening, and an Irish medium who told her to leave law. She left Islam. She never left God. Her line: the spirits will not pay your bills.

01

The medium who says "sometimes it's just you."

Evidence over feelings.
Discernment over manifestation. How to tell a real sign from wishful thinking.
Spirituality, afterlife, grief, intuition

02

The lawyer who lost everything.

Sorbonne, oil and gas, a divorce that broke her faith, walking away from law.
Surrender as the step before real change.
Reinvention, career, second acts, faith and culture

03

The medium and the not-quite-believer.

She talks to spirits. He does the taxes. Dina and Austin Terrill, a Texan founder ten years sober, a patchwork family in Berlin.
Relationships, couples, entrepreneurs. Solo or both

04

The Berlin myth.

Single mom, new language, psychedelics, techno, open relationships. She tore down every wall, and found she still holds traditional values. So did he.
Culture, expat, relationships. Best as a couple

CONVERSATION STARTERS

Is it me or spirit? What counts as evidence, and why 10–20% is imagination.

The spirits will not pay your bills. Why a medium insists on rent, plans and the gym.

From oil and gas contracts to the dead. What fifteen years of negotiation taught her about reading people.

Tested on camera. A WDR reportage had a skeptic score her reading for hits and misses.

Grief without the greeting card. "Don't listen to your dad just because he died."

Berlin. Techno, a club-night wedding, and a secular city full of people looking for God.

Nothing is off the table.

Surrender is not giving up. Seven steps from structure to collapse to rising. Collapse is a favour.

Leaving Islam, keeping God. What the divorce broke, and what stayed. "Yelling at God is also praying."

Stay or go. Reading relationships, "absent souls", and why sensitives should find a partner they can't read.

Plant medicine and the sober path. Ayahuasca is "the queen, but not for everyone." Why she now teaches opening without substances.

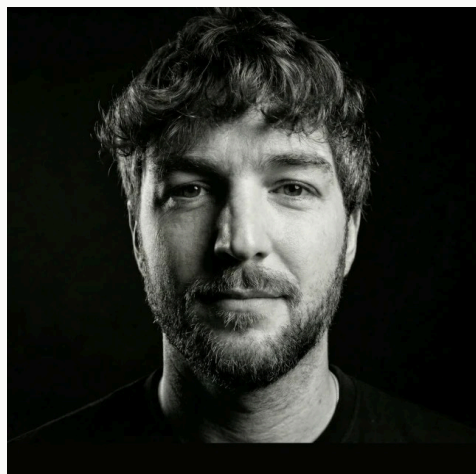

Shame, sex and spirit. Growing up where desire was forbidden.

The couple. A rational Texan in recovery and a medium at one kitchen table.

"Guidance doesn't ask for your opinion. It asks for your obedience."

"Fantasy is vague. Intuition is specific."

"He still has the same character. He's not different just because he died."

Austin Terrill

Austin grew up in Texas, the long-haired suburban kid who didn't care about football, and has lived in Berlin for thirteen years. He's Dina's manager and business partner. In 2006 he founded Print Peppermint, a specialty print studio doing foil, letterpress and cotton paper, shipping to more than 30 countries. He is ten years sober, works the 12 steps, has done three years of family constellation work, and has a psychedelic past he talks about openly. Rational by temperament. He believes in reincarnation, has read the entire Law of One, and still argues with his wife's spirit guides. He runs the businesses, does the money and packs the kids' lunches. She's his muse.
